Snag hits pumping station, water supply affected in Nagapattinam, Nagore, Velankanni

NAGAPATTINAM: A technical malfunction in the machinery pumping River Kollidam water to Nagapattinam has reduced the municipal water supply by nearly 30%. Tamil Nadu Water Supply and Drainage (TWAD) board is currently repairing one of the horizontal split case pumps at the Velipalayam pumping station, which serves Nagapattinam, Nagore, Velankanni and surrounding panchayats. Nagapattinam municipality, which depends on the Kollidam Combined Drinking Water Supply Scheme due to saline groundwater, typically receives water from collector wells in Thanjavur.

According to sources, of the two horizontal split case (HSC) motor pumps, with 20 HP power and 2339 litre/min pumping capacity, at the Velipalayam pumping station, one of them is under maintenance. Around 5.85 million litres per day (MLD) is supplied to 24,000 households in Nagapattinam municipality, with the main pumping station supplying 2.85 MLD. But the output from the head pumping station has been reduced to 1.4 MLD. Besides, the demand per individual is 135 litres per capita per day (LPCD). Currently, the municipality is only supplying 56 LPCD since the water supply has been hit, officials said. "The technical issue has impacted supply by at least 1 MLD, but we are managing to prevent an acute crisis. We've requested prompt repairs," municipality commissioner T. Leena Simon said.

Tamil naidu. I didn't know much about Long Tank that seems to have snaked through what is T Nagar today according to a map that has been etched in my memory ever since I first encountered it, until a few years ago.

During research for Rivers Remember, I stumbled upon a large sized digital map and I obsessively zoomed and zoomed into it, until I found what would have been the main road around my home. It was... inside the Long Tank. As I write this, a submersible motor is furiously pumping water out of my building's basement parking lot. Every year, before the fears of flooding begin to creep into others around me, even as they post photos of rain-drenched leaves, crisp banana fritters and tea, set to Ilayaraja's music on their Insta stories, a slow trickle of water emerging from a gap in the wall in my basement begins to gnaw away at the peace in our otherwise amiable neighbourhood. A basement car park inside Long Tank is self sabotage, we know that now. But in the years before 2015, this trickle was just called 'seepage'. As a solution to this seepage, an engineer suggested a secondary wall. The secondary wall too has a hole these days, through which water makes its way to flood our basement. As a mother now, I worry doubtly about that double wall. What if it crashes one day from the wetness of all this seepage? What if it hurts someone? The trauma of the 2015 floods is not just mine. It is collective and I know this because around October to December, every year since the time I wrote a book about it, people have remembered me, the book, and the floods. As the recent episode of heavy rain alert from mid-October shows us, the government machinery too seems to have a sense that there needs to be more communication, better preparedness and a reliance on weather systems (even

Yoga helps Bengaluru teacher escape murder bid, Five held

CHIKKABALLAPUR: An incident where a yoga teacher was allegedly kidnapped and assaulted by four supari lifters and dumped in a forest area, believing her to be dead, has been reported from Dibburhalli police limits in Chikkaballapur district. Though the incident took place on October 24, it came to light on Thursday with the arrest of the accused. According to the police, the teacher, who became unconscious after the accused assaulted her pretended to be dead. Yoga helped her hold her breath. After the accused left the spot, she reported the matter to the police with the help of some people from Dibburhalli. Chikkaballapur Superintendent of Police Kishal Chowksey said Archana, 35, the yoga teacher, had a strained relationship with her husband. The couple have two children and they hail from Krishnarajapuram in Bengaluru.

Woman pretender to be dead
Kushal said Archana's husband's friend Santosh also from Krishnarajapuram was in a relationship with her. Santosh's wife Bindu used to fight with him frequently over his relationship with Archana. Bindu hatched a plan to kill Archana and contacted one Sathesh Reddy, who has some criminal cases against him.

Inauguration of PDEU SPE Fest'24: A Two-Day Celebration of Sustainable Energy Innovation

Gandhinagar : PDEU SPE Fest'24, a distinguished two-day technical festival dedicated to the energy sector, was inaugurated with grandeur at Pandit Deendayal Energy University (PDEU) on 8th Nov 2024. The event, centered on the theme 'Synergy with Sustainability', brought together industry leaders, academics, and students for a unique convergence of knowledge and innovation. The inaugural ceremony was graced by eminent personalities, including Shri Prasun Kumar Sinha Executive Director, Ahmedabad Asset, ONGC, Ajay Verma (CEO & Founder of Rigworld), Mahendrapratap Singh (Head of Reservoir at DGH), Sh. Parvesh Gupta, Reliability Country Manager, HLS Asia, Dr. Anirbid Sircar (Director, SOET), and Dr. S. Sundar Manoharan (Director General, PDEU). Their presence underscored the importance of interdisciplinary collaboration and sustainable practices within the energy landscape.

Key highlights of PDEU SPE Fest'24 included a high-profile technical panel discussion, where leading experts shared insights on sustainable energy solutions and technological advancements. The fest also featured competitive segments such as paper and poster presentations, a case study competition, and engaging non-technical events like a debate competition that encouraged critical thinking and active participation.

Adding dynamism to the fest, school students from Kendriya Vidyalaya, Ahmedabad and Gandhinagar, attended the event, gaining exposure to the intricacies of the energy sector and the value of sustainability. This outreach reflected PDEU's commitment to fostering awareness and inspiring future generations. PDEU SPE Fest'24 proved to be an inspiring platform that united academia, industry, and youth under a shared vision for sustainable development and innovation in the energy field.
